

Iesus Nazarenus, Rex Iudaeorum: τι εστιν αληθεια?

by

Πόντιος Πιλάτος

Imperator Caesar Divi filius Augustus
SPQR CI — Lex Iniusta
April 3, 786 A.U.C.

Citing the Vulgate the first time produces a footnote, as in “In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum.” (John. 1:1)<sup>1</sup> But a second citation becomes parenthetical with an italicized attribution as in “Qui non diligit, non novit Deum: quoniam Deus caritas est.” (1 John. 4:8 Vulgatam)

The first time the Catechism gets cited, it’s the full deal.<sup>2</sup> But what does Tommy Quine-Quine have to say about the same subject?<sup>3</sup> CCC with a stirring rebuttal!<sup>4</sup> (Notice that it just becomes “CCC” on subsequents.)

That one was easy, because the Citation Style Language<sup>5</sup> (note URLs for links go in footnotes, but only in LaTeX) has ready support for short titles, and since the Catechism doesn’t have an author to list, it works out. What’s trickier is the USCCB, which wants to get referenced by its full name the first time,<sup>6</sup> but then afterwards gets “institutionally abbreviated.”<sup>7</sup> (Support for author short names is supposed to come in CSL 1.1, but there’s no timetable on that, so gotta use my little Lua filters<sup>8</sup> to get it done.) It works with multiple citations, too.<sup>9</sup>

For Papal Encyclicals, we need to make sure the capitalization of the Latin name stays consistent, so this cite<sup>10</sup> should mention “Fratelli tutti” but not in title case. Should also happen for its second mention<sup>11</sup> where it only goes by the Latin name. No quotes around any of it in the citation.

In the end, we give Tommy the final word,<sup>12</sup> and note the author drop from his subsequent citation.
